KIERKEGAARD – in love in Berlin

It's here. The first book on Kierkegaard and Berlin. About Kierkegaard's thoughts and experiences in Berlin in the winter of 1841-1842, when he was there for 4 ½ months, and in 1843, 1845 and 1846 when he was only there briefly, from one to three weeks. And apart from a mention of Kierkegaard's infatuation with the soprano Hedvig Schulze, we hear about his writing projects in Berlin, about Schelling, whose lectures he attended, about Regine Olsen, whom he asked Emil Boesen to watch at home in Copenhagen. And we read about his health, his education in German, on his estate conditions down there, about food and drink, weather and about Christmas in Berlin. About why he calls himself 'Farinelli' in one of his letters to his friend Emil Boesen. And his other cultural experiences in Berlin, besides the presence of Mozart's Don Giovanni at the Opera in Berlin, and on his relationship with the other Danes, who were also in Berlin.

Kierkegaard's letters and notes from Berlin, is edited by writer and philosopher Jens Staubrand, who also wrote the book's full introduction.

The book is published / on sale from: xx January 2012.
